End of Life Assistance (Scotland) Bill

Evelyn Clark

I wish to submit my opposition to the above Bill.

As I understand it, the Bill is intended to allow someone to die with dignity and without distress. Surely these services are already being provided through palliative care and the excellent Hospices which are available.

Also, the previous attempts at both the Scottish and Westminster Parliaments to introduce such a Bill have met with opposition and lack of support, which makes this effort all the more incredible that yet again another attempt is being made.

Professional medical bodies and the BMA do not support assisted suicide. How could they be expected to carry out a procedure which goes against the grain of saving life.

I would ask that these views be taken into account when this Bill is being debated.
