As an old lady not soon forgetting any letter these days, I feel that I must register my opposition to the End of Life Assistance Bill.

I do not know what I may have to endure before the end of my days, but I certainly don't want the encouragement to take my own life or have it taken by someone else.

Thankfully, much is being done these days to alleviate suffering, so hope fully with research more can be done rather than go down a slippery slope.
will all its possible abuses.

It seems that medical bodies & BMA do not support assisted suicide. I can see that elevating them to legal status puts them in a very awkward position.

If society accepts euthanasia it means that some lives no longer have any meaning, value or worth — and who is to make that decision?

May wisdom prevail in the matter. Yours sincerely
